Gould Academy turned the tables winner by the identical score of last year's upset by Norway, During the first period Gould got to Norway's 8-yard line due to the recovery of a fumbled punt by the Norway safety man. Here, as during the most part of the initial period the Norway spread defense throttled Gould's reverses and threw them back.

In the second period the winners, seeing Norway's spread defense, began hammering the line. In relentless hard smashing line play Gould marched to the only score of the day when Brown finally tallied from the two yard line.

Norway opened up with a pass attack in the closing minutes of the first half and also threw a number of passes in the last half but could complete only two out of 12 attempted. The losers never between the 30 yard lines.

1940 Chevrolets Make Their Bow

Three series of passenger cars, re-designed in the new "Royal Clipper" styling, and embodying numerous mechanical improvements to assure greater safety and comfort as well as finer performance, comprise Chevrolet's new line for 1940, introduced today. All series are much larger, overall length being increased 4% inches. The new exclusive vacuum power shift (lower left) is now regular equipment on all models of all series at no extra cost. Special De Luxe series, the Sport Sedan of which is shown at center, has a new T-spoke steering wheel with horn-blowing ring (upper right). Lower right, the 1940 Chevrolet six-cylinder valve-in-head engine, which has been improved for smoother, quieter operation, and extremely long life.

Well sir the way things are run nowdays it is just one week after another. There's hardly a month goes by but that the governor doesn't fix two or three weeks for safety or fire prevention, the printing industry or the business and professional women. I guess none of them do any hurt or much good either. I guess most of these things are started with good intentions and nobody is making much money in the racket unless It is the postoffice department when they get out to make up a set of stamps for one week or another. I am still pretty sure that this country is the best of them all, in spite of all the foot difficulties that come up when folks get the idea that they are smart enough to govern themselves, and so I would like to suggest that some governor try out the idea of basing a mind your own business work. It is getting so that there are so many things you can't do. with minimum hours and wages and theners for this and that, that: Outdoor silhouettes are easy, with sun behind subject. THE STORY

CHAPTER I—On board the Nord-Express, bound for Ostend, Dr. David Jobb
le bended for America. With him is fiveyear-old Cynthia Thatcher, his temporary ward. On the train they meet Bill Goines, fermer classmate of David's.
David bella Gaines of his mission, and of his one unconquerable vice—an overwhelming desire for liquor. Jabb feels the wron coming to him again, and wants to safeguard the child, whose father is dead and whose mother awaits her comlog is the United States.

CHAPTER II—David receives a minor injury while on the train, and a sympathetic passenger pours brandy down his threat. That is sufficient to kindle the figure of desire for liquor. Jebb takes the child with him, leaves the train, and begins drinking. Bill Gaines, the old schoolmale, remains on board the train.

CHAPTER III—A strange incantation wakes Jebb from a dult alupor. His brain in a fog, he tooks around, seeing a strange woman, dreased in flowing robes and beavily veiled. In broken English the tells him he is in Uskub, that her name is Miruma, and that she will take care of him. She had not seen Cynibia, who is missing. Laser Miruma tells him she is the wife of a Pasha, but wife in name only. The Porba has another wife in name only a powerful page in Polyah, alter Bey, whose son is slowly dying.

The father is a very rich bey. There are no good doctors here. Jebb Effendi could leeve in Uskub and become most terrecule for recciness."

The thought of living in Uskub was not so appalling to Jebb as it would have seemed a few hours before. The thought of money was always agreeable

"No, no. I bought it myself-in-Cologne." And he added with perfect truth: "It has no associations for me whatever." With which he twisted it from his finger and held it eut to her.

Suddenly a truth stabbed Jebb to the heart; he saw that this woman for whom he had begun to feel a tenderness had begun to feel a jealousy of him. The implied proprietorship did not irritate him. It delighted him; and the delight was the keener for being edged with fear.

"Tomorrow morning while yet the rffendi is sleep (Inshallah!) Jaffar shall have goed and comed back with the money."

"But how can I slip out in the daylight without being seen?"

"Also that I have theenked. I tell you tomorrow day, for now eet is ver' late. Allah send you the sweetest of sleep,"

"Don't go!" he pleaded. But she was gathering herself together to stand up. He leaped to his feet to was not a thing in all the stranger's help her. To rise from a crosslegged position is something of a feat. It is one of the few that harem laziares permits. Miruma rose

But as she stepped forward, foot caught on the hem of her robe. She lost her poise, swayed, would have fallen. But Jebb had risen her weight was upon him so suddenly that he had no little difficulty with his own equilibrium. The recovery of both was a matter of brief and busy delay

Miruma gave a little cry of alarm at her plight, another of dismay at finding herself in a man's arms. And then she fled, soft-footed, spiritual, like a dark cloud trailing along a mountainside

He put out the lights and groped the way to the window where the enconbeams beat in and showered the floor.

CHAPTER IV

At the Hotel Turati Jebb was accepted on his own recognizance. He found that his English was of no was, elicited the good news that there were British, Austrian, and Russian consulates in the town.

He made haste to the British building, but the Albanian kavasa on guard informed him in a few broken English phrases that the consul was ill and was not likely to be well for some days. Jebb stood irresolute. then went to the Austrian consulate.

Here he was informed that the consul was in conference with his Russian confrere and the two governors of Uskub, the Turk and the Christian, and the affairs of Turkey were in such confusion, added to the increasing disorder of the district linelf, that there was little hope of seeing the consul.

Jebb looked so downeast at this that his informant asked the nature of his errand, and introduced himself as Herr Xavier Franz Heller was Heliwald of Vienna. Jebb introduced himself as a former student at the University of Vienna and the young attache mellowed immestructure with an awning over the

"But what brings you, Herr Docter Yep, to this dismal cometery of an Vekup*"

Jebb abook his head with a dreary Ich weiss nicht," and then poured forth in halting German and with halting contage as much of his story as he felt it discreet to divulge.

"That is a problem indeed, Herr Doctor Yep. Now if you knew where you lost the child-"If I only knew!"

"If you knew where you had lost her, it would be easier. And yet not easy at that. If she had disappeared in Vienna, or Berlin, or Paris, we could telegraph and the great engine of the police of Europe could be set in motion. But we are in Turkey, and Turkey is in revolution. Nobody knows what will happen tomorrow. Nobody knows what happened yesterday. We only know that Constantinople is captured by the revolutionists and that the Sultan is prisoner."

Miruma had told Jebb nothing of this; either she had known little of it, or had forgotten it in the stress of more personal events.

"The Sultan a prisoner!" Jebb gasped. "Turkey in revolution! And the little child lost among these savages."

"What did you say the child's name was?"

"Cynthia Thatcher." "Tseentia Tat-Tsent-iseend- it is an erschrecklich name to say. Bomben, Granaten! Herr Doctor Yep, if somebody asks the child her name and she tells it, nobody will be able to repeat it or to remember it."

"You must help me."

"I will do my all, and gladly. It will take much money. In Turkey nobody moves-not even the Sultan -without baksheesh. You have much money, yes?"

Jebb tossed his hands. "I have a hundred and fifty dollars-about six hundred marks."

"You have a difficult problem, Herr Doctor. We must see what we can do. Your passports are in good shape, I hope."

"Passports? I never had any." "You must have had to get into Turkey And you must have had a teskere or you could not have traveled.

"If I had them I tost them, and I don't know where." "Where were you last, did you

"In Salonica, I think. All I know is that the train from Salonica brought me here."

'Salonica! Bomben, Granateni It is the very home of the revolution Everything started there. And you have been in Salonica without knowing. And how did you get there? You probably reached there by the railroad from Constantinople. Have you been in Constantinople?"

"I don't know." "Did you have the child with you In Salonica?"

"I don't know. I may have had. I cannot tell."

Hellwald phook his head in dismay and expleded his "Bomben. Granaten" in a whisper. Past the cate where Jebb and Hell wall out prodering flowed the eddying traffic of the street. Now and then a Turk, a Russian, an Austrian, or a Macedonian saluted Hellwald after the menner of his race or station, and the Austrian answered in kind.

At length a sound of distant walling, and a hint of doleful chant be gan to define itself above the clatter. The crowd paused and massed to give way to a funeral procession led by bearded priests of the Greek Church in gorgeous vestments. marching slowly and singing.

The procession turned the corner and disappeared. Among those who had paused to watch the cortege was a venerable white bearded Turk in fez and frock coat; he seemed to be deeply touched. After the crowd had dispersed he still stood in de jection Hellwald said to Jebb: "That is Akel Bey, one of the leaders of the Young Turks. His eldest son is an officer at the citadel. His younger son, Gani Bey, is very ill, and the doctors here can do nothing for him.

Jebb started at the names of Akef Bey and his son He was about to say that he was waiting to be sought by this very man when he realized the indiscretion of such a remark. Akef Bey saw Hellweld and greeted him with a sad courtesy in a sweeping salute from the brow. Hellwald rose, saying to Jebb. "Excuse me, I must ask him how his ann is today." He went to the old man and ques tuned him in what Jobb assumed to be Turkish Aket Bey answered with much excitement and vivid gentures of pain and despair. Hellwald listened with evident sorrow. Then he seemed to brighten with an idea. He beckoned Jebb.

"I have just fold Aket Bey that you are one of the most eminent physicians in America, and that I knew you well in Vienna when you studied at the greatest of all Universitles. It is near enough to the truth for a diplomat."

As he was saying this to Jebb, the Bey was pouring fluent Turkish into his other ear. Hellwald translated in short asides:

"He is asking me if you cannot come to see his son at once-don't accept-look solemn-you are busy -you are leaving town-the other physicians have failed to help him, he says-they are ignorant dogs-his son cries aloud in agony. But don't accept too readily. Don't go yet. Remember this is Turkey. They expect to bargain for everything. He is rich. You need much money."

But Jebb agreed and on the way they passed a miscellaneous bazaar, where a meager supply of drugs was kept for the foreign population. There Jebb managed to find a large hypodermic needle and a supply of tablets, which he purchased along with a few of such simples as the ezja-hane possessed.

"Don't go yet. Remember this is Turkey."

The home of Akef Bey was important in Uskub, large enough to be called a Konak.

The Bey led them up a broad stairway to a large hall with a cushioned divan along three sides, with low, carved tables, mirrors, and Turkish hangings.

On a low platform covered with bedding, a boy of fifteen lay writhing. Jebb saw nothing, looked at nothing, but his patient. He took ent the hypodermic syringe and said: "Could I have some hot water?" Jebb knelt at the bedside and eximined the glowing body. He noted the right leg drawn up close. The Bey told, and Hellwald translated, the history of the case.

Jebb glanced toward Hellwald with one word:

"Appendicitis."

By this time someone was kneeling at his side with a ewer of steaming water and a basin. He filled the chamber of the hypodermic needle and paused for the tablet to dissolve. Then he looked about for the first time. In the background hovered young man in a shabby European costume. Jebb decided he was a Scotchman. When the opinie was dissolved, Jebb made ready for the injection. The terrified boy fought him away but Jebb overcame the boy's feeble resistance and thrust the needle in the shivering flesh. Ganl Bey screamed as if he had a deathwound, and the women echoed him piercingly. Even the father closed his eyes and toppled against the ROWE HILL WALL.

Jebb alone was calm. He was almest amiliag at his success in inserting the opiate so near the center of rain. He took under his thumb the boy's wrist and mechanically fel! for his watch. It was not there. He turned to Hellwold:

"Bitte, wie viel the ist's?" Before Hellwald could answer, Jebb heard atmeone say:

"Fourrricen minutes to eleven, doctorr." And a watch was placed in his palm, by a hand that lingered to clasp his, as the donor spoke: "I am glad to see a real doctors here, ductorr. You are an Amayrican, I presume. My name is Murison, Donald Murison. I am a Presbyterian missionary, not a physician. I have done my best, but it is not much."

"Had, you thought an operation was-indicated?"

"Ye-es, I supposed so, but I couldn't trust myself to make one. And there is no decent surrge n nearer than Salonica. I have a set of instruments, but-"

"Thanks, I may need them," said

Under the spell of the drug the boy permitted Jebb to make a careful examination and confirm the theory suggested by the other symptoms. He turned to Murison:

"Tell them the relief is only temporary. The boy is very sick, and the pain will come back on him with renewed violence. The cyst will burst and flood his body with poison and he will die, unless-unless the danger is removed at once and for all time."

"By an-an operation?"

"That is the one hope. It would be murder to neglect it. I should be a criminal unless I urged it."

With much circumlocution Murison broached the subject to the parents and they were affrighted at the. thought. Jebb explained it to Hellwald and he joined forces with Murison. Akef Bey was converted at last, and gave his consent. Akef Bey put all the servants of his household at Jebb's command and Hellwald forgot the affairs of Austria to act as interpreter, while Murison hastened to fetch the instru-

Hellwald could not forget the lost child whose name he could not pronounce, and he brought up the subject of the fee that Jebb should demand.

The upshot of it was that Hellwald settled upon one hundred pounds Turkish as the fee for the operation, whether successful or not. He accepted Akef Bey's word of honor as equivalent to a deposit in gold.

By this time he was ready with the ether and, smiling courage into the brave eyes of the little stoic, he hid them under the hood and watched the deep breathing of the obedient youth till the drugged soul had ceased to murmur.

Then he lifted the body, limp with mimic death, and carried it across the hall to the room prepared for the operation. Hellwald sat outside on the divan trying to givert Akef Bey with conversation. As Murison went in with Jebb he looked back with doleful eyes at the shivering father. Then he let the curtain at the door fall.

It seemed many hours, but it was hardly the half of one when Murison lifted the curtain again for Jebb. who reappeared carrying in his arm the burden still peacefully unaware of its new wounds and bandages.

The surgeon's face wore a look of quiet triumph and Murison as he lifted the curtain at the door of the boy's room turned back to murmur: "Ajayib!" which is to say, "Wonderful!" The father, the mother, and the sister crowded at once to the room to find their idol still alive, breathing raucously, and beginning to mutter sleepy nonsense as he came back to the world.

All the afternoon Jebb ministered to the boy and eased his pain as much as he dared. That night he had a couch spread for himself ea the floor alongside, but sleep did not visit him, nor anyone else under that roof. For nature, the seamstress, was stitching the wounds with needles of pain. But by the hour when the few swallows of the early spring wake, peace fell on the racked body and the frightened spirit of the boy. And all the household was blessed with sleep.
